

Time Management Skills

Montessori education focuses on observing and following children in their activity choices; giving students the freedom to explore their interests is one of many ways to encourage independence and a love of learning. However, as a Montessori teacher, occasionally we observe that a particular child is having difficulty actually choosing and completing an activity.

By helping our students learn to allot time for their work and practice time management skills, we can help them move toward enjoying greater success through productivity. When students are able to choose an activity and feel the personal reward of completing their work, they become more confident and want more challenges.

The following article will give you some ideas on how to teach your child time management skills.

<https://www.thespruce.com/how-to-teach-your-kids-time-management-skills-4126>

588

Material of the month

Albanesi Geometry Lab: This Lab contains 30 levels of Montessori exercises printed on cardstock. The cards are color-coded to indicate the levels of difficulty.

